Description

Ishinca is a mountain located in the department of Áncash. It has an altitude of 5,530 m s. no. m. It is located in the Ishinca ravine in the district and province of Huaraz, in the Cordillera Blanca in the Peruvian Andes. Due to its access it is ideal for those who start mountaineering.

Ishinca (5,530m/18,143ft) is a nice non-technical climb, and is commonly used as an acclimatization peak for those planning to climb Tocllaraju (6,032m/19,790ft). This moderately sized mountain is situated between two giants of the range, Ranrapalca (6,162 m / 20,217 ft) and Palcaraju (6,272 m / 20,577 ft). It was first climbed in 1954 via its southeast ridge, but the normal modern route is via the northeast ridge. Ishinca is reached from the Ishinca Valley, the same valley that gives access to Tocllaraju and other climbable peaks making your base camp a very practical one. where we see impressive views of mountains such as Huascarán (6768m), Hualcan (6112m), Ranrapalca (6162m) and Chopicalqui (6354m).
